Our contemporary, the Norfolk Virgin ian-Pilot, has created a new name for those Democrats who refused to support Mr. Bryan on the Chicago platform in 1896, but who accepted and supported him in 1900, though he ran on the same platform. HOPELESSLY CONFUSED

Our esteemed contemporary, the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot, still continues to demand that the Presidential candidate of its party be taken from the South; and the delegates from Virginia be instructed for a Virginian. It gives the subservient Democracy of the South a stinging rebuke for yielding everything to New York.

Our contemporary says: "The plain truth is that in the New tween the graft of the poor and the graft to the Hill men, who controlled the conof the rich-between plutocracy and social- vention: "And now you propose to nomism-between the corporation lawyer and inste upon it (the platform) a man who the dive-keeper, the beer-slinger and the can stand for anything or nothing."
